Telecoms Expert Launches Revolutionary Integrated Home Automation System For Disabled

Liverpool, Merseyside (May 2008) - Making an impact on the lives of the elderly and disabled in the North West of England is a social mission for Home Automation expert, Raymond Collins. Raymond is using his skills in advanced technologies to create what he calls "Intelligent Homes that offer people unrivalled freedom for a more independent life".

Collins launched CommAssist Limited launched in November 2007 and has created the UK's first Integrated Assistive Technology Solution of its kind. This breakthrough makes use of modern technology applied to home automation systems that are tailored specifically for those people who find it difficult to perform routine tasks or who need extra supervision and security. "My wife is an Occupational Therapist and talking to her it became apparent that people have real problems when faced with a long-term physical disability, ill health or decreasing mobility, for example, dependency on others, the need for comprehensive health monitoring, feelings of isolation, the ability to control the home environment and the reassurance of instant support when needed among other things. So I decided to do something about this and developed our unique Integrated Assistive Technology, IAT, system".

Collins incorporated their business plan with a social mission to develop a range of products, utilising the most cutting edge technologies to help people to stay in the comfort of their own homes rather than move to a care home and to give them back some of the independence they may have lost. Collins said, "I wanted to make the most of my extensive expertise in Telecommunications and IT to contribute something back to the Community at large and with an ageing population, CommAssist has developed something that will matter to everyone at some point in their lives", Collins stated.

CommAssist offers an integrated modular solution they term Integrated Assistive Technology or IAT[®] for short, "It sounds complicated, but its simple really, it just means we have a basic product upon which additional modules can be added when they are needed, a little like building blocks. This makes the system affordable for everyone and should someone want to add something else, it can be added with no fuss."
